

Newbery Award

The Newbery Award is given for the most distinguished contribution to children's literature. It is awarded by the American Library Association (ALA) each year. The award is named after John Newbery, an eighteenth-century British bookseller.

The ALA announces the winner of this prestigious award at their mid-winter conference. Click on the Newbery Medal picture above to go directly to their website to see this years winners!

